

(E)merging Identities: Graduate Students in the Writing Center

Introduction: “(E)Merging Identities: Authority, Identity, and the Place In-Between”
Melissa Nicolas, Rochester Institute of Technology

Part I: Graduate Students as Tutors and Clients

- Chapter 1 “Collusion and Collaboration: Concealing Authority in Writing Center Conversation”
Brooke Rollins, University of South Carolina; Trixie G. Smith, Middle Tennessee State University; Evelyn Westbrook, University of Texas, Austin
- Chapter 2 “Teaching in the Middle at A Graduate School Writing Center”
Helen Snively, Independent Scholar
- Chapter 3 “Training as Invention: Topoi for Graduate Writing Consultants”
Christopher LeCluyse, Southwestern University
Sue Mendelsohn, University of Texas, Austin
- Chapter 4 “Just Between Me and Me: A Letter to Myself About Being a Graduate Student Tutor and Administrator”
Michael Mattison, Boise State University

Part II: Graduate Students as Administrators

- Chapter 5 “The Tale of a Position Statement: Finding a Voice for the Graduate Student Administrator in Writing Center Discourse”
Julie Eckerle, Framingham State College; Karen Rowan, SUNY; Albany; Shevaun Watson, University of South Carolina
- Chapter 6 “Mentoring Graduate Students as Assistant Directors: Complementary Journeys”
Leigh Ryan, University of Maryland; Lisa Zimmerelli, University of Maryland
- Chapter 7 “From Innocence to Experience to Organized Innocence: Graduate Student Administrators Negotiate Positions of Power”
Katherine E. Tirabassi, University of New Hampshire; Amy A. Zenger, American University of Beirut; Cinthia Gannett, Loyola University, Baltimore
- Chapter 8 “You’re Either a Scholar or an Administrator, Make Your Choice: Preparing Graduate Students for Writing Center Administration”
Nathalie Singh-Corcoran, West Virginia University
- Chapter 9 “Grounds for Growth: A Territorialist Perspective on Graduate Students in the Writing Center”
Luke Niiler, The University of Texas at Tyler
- Afterword: “Ill Wind Across the Writing Center”
Mitch Alderman, University of Louisiana, Lafayette